Billionaires Melinda French Gates and MacKenzie Scott this month invested a total of $23 million in the School-Based Health Alliance (SBHA), the leading Washington, D.C.-based, national nonprofit that promotes the expansion of school-based health centers (SBHCs).

Gates' contribution ($16 million), made through her Pivotal Ventures company, will launch SBHC "care coordination initiatives" in Houston, Atlanta, Chicago and Miami. Scott's funding ($7 million) will support general operations for the alliance.

The funding substantially increases the alliance's revenue, which was less than $4 million in 2022, the most recent year for which data is available. Before the new $23 million investment, most of the nonprofit's funding came from federal grants.

SBHA tweeted the grant announcement:

The organization's mission is to increase the number of SBHCs nationally among schools that receive federal funding through policy advocacy, technical support to existing centers and support securing funding for new and existing centers. There are approximately 3,900 SBHCs in the U.S.

SBHCs are intended to provide healthcare to kids by offering "primary care, mental healthcare, and other health services in schools," particularly in underserved communities.

This includes services "to prevent disease, disability, and other health conditions or their progression" such as "immunizations" and "well-child care," typically with a focus on advancing equity.

Promoting equity is also a key platform for Pivotal Ventures, which Gates founded in 2015 to "accelerate social progress in the United States by removing barriers that hold people back." It is a venture capital fund that primarily makes return-seeking investments rather than providing philanthropic donations, but it also has grantees like the alliance.

"The Wuhan Cover-Up" by Robert F. Kennedy Jr. ORDER NOW

SBHCs 'completely unregulated'

Justine Tanguay, an attorney and director of Children's Health Defense's (CHD) Reform Pharma initiative, told The Defender there is a long history of private equity firms investing in healthcare in pursuit of their own interests.

"Many philanthropists and donors claim that funding SBHCs provides underserved and low-income families with equity and access to affordable healthcare," Tanguay said. "But it's not about improving children's health, it's about making money."

The Pivotal Ventures-backed care coordination initiatives will fund staff positions for SBHC "care coordinators" in schools serving low-income families. Coordinators will set up information-sharing "among all those concerned with a student's health needs and care," including students, parents or guardians, school staff and/or healthcare professionals.

They will also address issues such as housing, food security and transportation as part of student care.

Workgroups comprised of staff from SBHCs and "community members" in each city will select the coordinators. The initiative also will lobby for policies to take over payment for the care coordinators through Medicaid.

Tanguay said these kinds of models for SBHCs have the potential to circumvent parents' rights to make healthcare decisions for their children by allowing care providers direct access to minors, potentially without parental consent.

"Here, the opportunity to circumvent both parental rights and informed consent is ripe for abuse since SBHCs are completely unregulated and therefore, have no oversight," she said.

Georgia attorney Nicole Johnson, co-director of Georgia Coalition for Vaccine Choice and a consultant to the CHD legal team, also told The Defender the $23 million investment raised concerns about who was making decisions and what kind of regulations might be in place to protect children and families.

"The large federal grants combined with this Gates/Scott funding seem to be putting SBHCs on a fast track across the nation," Johnson said.

"As beneficial as some of these services may be, shouldn't we slow down and consider who is leading the charge for these SBHCs and what their motives may be? Shouldn't we make sure there are proper regulatory frameworks in place to protect children and parents?" she asked.

Scott's award is the largest "unrestricted" gift in the alliance's 28-year history, meaning that it is not earmarked for any particular project and will be used to support general organizational costs for the nonprofit, to use as its leadership sees fit.

"I believe that SBHCs could be of benefit and service to many families, of any income," Johnson said. "But as they are being rolled out, there are few guardrails in place to safeguard children's medical data/privacy, ensure continuity of care and protect parental rights," she added.

Philanthropic funding key to SBHC expansion for decades

SBHCs are typically full-service health clinics physically situated within school buildings, although a small percentage of them are mobile units or, increasingly, telehealth clinics.

The Association of American Pediatrics (AAP) began to establish the first SBHCs in the 1960s in Massachusetts, Texas and Minnesota. Since their inception, they have focused on providing services to low-income children who lack access to regular healthcare.

Until the late 1980s, there were just a handful of SBHCs, primarily located in "urban communities" across the country. Their work focused on family planning, along with general youth health and well-being.

Early controversies over SBHCs focused on issues of reproductive healthcare and parental rights, but efforts to establish new SBHCs expanded rapidly in the 1990s.

The Center for Population Options, which was dedicated to reducing unintended teenage pregnancy, was the first organization to offer technical support and conduct periodic qualitative studies of existing SBHCs and their services. By 1998, the School-Based Health Alliance took over those roles.

SBHCs numbered 1,135 in 45 states by 1998-99, with the expansion largely funded through more than $40 million from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and allocations by state governments.

Medicaid expansion in the 1990s also helped to shore up funding for SBHCs through coverage to low-income patients, along with congressional funding earmarked for SBHCs beginning in 1995 through the Healthy Schools, Healthy Communities program, which ended by 2005.

After that, funding for SBHCs was available from the Health Resources and Services Administration, as long as the grantees were federally qualified health centers. SBHCs also receive funding from third-party insurers and patient fees.

Through the Affordable Care Act in 2010, Congress appropriated $200 million over four years toward construction, renovation and equipment for SBHCs. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) distributed that money in 520 awards across the country.

By 2017, there were at least 2,317 SBHCs.

The Biden administration's HHS in 2021 awarded $5 million in grants to expand school-based healthcare in the U.S. It continued this grant program the next year in May 2022, awarding $25 million in grants to 125 SBHCs. In 2023, HHS awarded another $25 million to 77 health centers for school-based service expansion.

Congress and President Joe Biden in June 2022 also passed the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act, which allowed HHS to award $50 million in grants to states "for the purpose of implementing, enhancing, or expanding the provision" of healthcare assistance through SBHCs using Medicaid or the Children's Health Insurance Program.

The legislation charged the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services with expanding access to Medicaid healthcare services — including behavioral health services — in schools, and reducing the administrative burden for states and schools.

Since 2008, the number of telehealth SBHCs has also grown substantially, increasing from 7% of SBHCs to 19% from 2016-17.

Concerns over parental rights remain central to the debate over SBHCs today. Tanguay said that SBHCs can provide adolescents with confidential health services without parental consent, based on the assumption that some services, like family planning, could have negative consequences for the child if the parents were involved.

This often means that parents are denied access to their children's health information due to confidentiality rules, but that information can be shared with providers including school nurses and other interested parties on the care team.

"It's a very slippery slope that appears to eliminate barriers to sharing a student's private health information, rather than protecting them," she said.

While the early focus of SBHCs was on family planning and reproductive health, today the literature focuses more on their potential "to address lagging immunization rates" and to provide mental health services to children and teens facing a reported mental health crisis.

Groups like the AAP, a strong supporter of SBHCs, have used the mental health crisis to call on the Biden administration to fund expanded access to screening, diagnosing and treatment for children, arguing access to "school-based mental health care" should be a priority.

The administration responded with new policy measures, including the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act — which made $1 billion available for mental health services — and the American Rescue Plan Act. Both offer funding explicitly for school-based mental health services for students, KFF Health News reported.

Many of these resources have funded the expansion of SBHCs.

Pivotal Ventures Senior Manager of the Adolescent Mental Health strategy Sara Bathum indicated the corporation's interest in mental health was a key motivation for its funding to the alliance.

"School-Based Health Alliance's unique approach embeds mental health resources for youth and families within existing centers of care, making it easier to access trusted, culturally responsive support. We are proud to partner with them in this important effort in these communities and look forward to seeing their impact," she said.

"Mental health is clearly a significant focus of these centers," Johnson said. "But Parents should be very concerned about how these centers treat mental health issues."

Johnson gave the example of a case in Maine where a federally funded school-based health center reportedly gave prescription anti-depressant pills in a plastic baggie to a 17-year-old girl without her parents' knowledge or consent.

Pharma vs. parents in the SBHC rollout

The School-Based Health Alliance calls itself the "national voice for school-based healthcare." It consults for organizations seeking to start SBHCs — helping them secure funding, providing technical support and even providing direct funding. It also tracks and lobbies for SBHC-friendly policies on the local, state and federal levels.

In addition to Gates and Scott, SBHA funders include Merck, maker of the Gardasil human papillomavirus (HPV) vaccine. Merck funded SBHA's "vaccine toolkit" along with a 2023 SBHA program to increase vaccinations through child wellness visits.

Military think tank Rand Corporation also is a funder. Previous funders include Gilead and insurance giants Kaiser Permanente and Aetna.

Tanguay said the alliance's ties to Big Pharma are concerning, given that SBHCs are such a" windfall" for Pharma, particularly if they provide a way around parental consent.

She said:

> "Big Pharma is a trojan horse that if given the opportunity, will have direct access to our children at school without the need for parental involvement.
>
> "It's no surprise that Big Pharma is supporting SBHCs because the goal is to diagnose and medicate as many students as possible for the sake of 'improving' the health of the child. Big Pharma's business model anticipates that the more prescriptions written the more money they will make."

The alliance's board members also have ties to major healthcare conglomerates, and their resumes often highlight their success in vaccinating low-income people of color against COVID-19.

Board member Mark Masselli is CEO of the Moses Weitzman Health System, formerly Community Health Center, in Connecticut, which boasts of having administered over 500,000 COVID-19 vaccines and winning "national acclaim for its educational messages addressing vaccine hesitancy among people of color."

Board member Alexandra Quinn, former Kellogg Foundation fellow, co-founded the Vaccine Equity Cooperative during the COVID-19 pandemic, to vaccinate people of color, largely by training "trusted messengers" to promote the idea that the vaccines are "safe and effective" — a strategy advocated and funded by federal public health institutions.

Another board member, Dr. Gillian Barclay, is the vice president of Global Public Health & Scientific Affairs at Big Pharma's Colgate Palmolive, and previously worked at the Kellogg Foundation and World Health Organization.

Board member Cecilia Oregón works at healthcare giant Kaiser Permanente, where she is an advocate for universal internet access (digital equity) to get people telehealth access.

Robert Boyd, the alliance's president and CEO, has been instrumental in getting federal appropriations for new and expanded SBHCs. In the meantime, Johnson said, the onus is on parents to advocate for state laws that ensure that SBHC expansion happens in a way that is regulated and offers protection for parents and children.

"In New Hampshire, for instance, a proposed bill regarding the establishment of SBHCs includes a provision that would require parents to be present when services are provided," she said.

"I believe that requiring a parent's presence is a win-win — the parent can share information about the child's health history and any current treatments/medications and can also participate in and consent to any additional treatments."

Schools are not hospitals or health clinics and should not be. Fine to have a nurse on site in case of an emergency. This is all about taking control from parents and pushing shots on all kids by pharma. The family is no longer sacred. The parent/child bond has been violated. The whole social justice movement is destroying kids, families and society at large.

Public schools have long been use as a tool to eliminate indigenous knowledge from being passed down from generation to generation. It is this void of knowledge which allows the state to implement what they want in the hearts and minds of the younger generation. This is how we got to where we are now. What Gates and Scott are doing now is simply continuing to erode the lives of those who fall for their insidious endeavor. For all of our children's sake they need to be stopped.

This is nothing more than profits over people for pharmaceutical companies, for D.O.E.s, for under the table kickbacks, for school districts, et al. The only problem is that almost all health problems whether physical or mental are due to malnutrition and are not medical problems at all. So, if there's going to be these privately funded clinics on school property, there needs to be a disinterested third party present at all times to prevent medical actions strictly based on increasing billing. There should be no drug administered without parental consent period. Otherwise, these "clinics" should not be allowed at all. Human beings are systems of nutrition and drainage, not drug poisoning and drainage. Other than serious accidents where people are in major pain and some corrective surgeries, there's really no other situation where drugs should be administered. It's contrary to health not health promoting.

Two brain-dead billionaires who have no concept about what health is... promoting clinics to further destroy the minds and bodies of our young people.. In the early sixties my young son was sent home from one of these school clinics, because he was hyperactive. I was told to take him to the doctor. The doctor put a 4-1/2 year old on tranquilziers. Fortunately, I removed them within ten days, when a friend handed me some health books. The first two things I read woke me up: Sugar creates hyperactivity and tranquilzers STUNT the developiing organs of children. The doctor was the one who had given me information on what to feed my son.(many foods containing sugar) and now he put him on tranquilzers. Many school clinics have done this to our young children..giving parents very poor advice. I didn't know doctors did not study nutrition, but after learning this...I didn't trust his doctor again.

When one reads "Vaccine Equity Cooperative," then one must see what the legalistic double-speak words could actually mean. We all know how Vaccine is defined, but besides Equity meaning "fairness, impartiality," it can also be defined as "an ownership interest; value of property; or a right which accrues to a party in a transaction." Then, the word "Cooperative" could be read as "Co-Operative," with Co- meaning "together, mutually, or jointly," and Operative meaning, "Having the power of acting; hence, exerting force, physical or moral; active in the production of effects."

So, perhaps what they're really saying, is "Vaccine ownership interests, of valued property, whereby mutually allowing the operative power of those that can exert force, under the guise of morality, for everyone's interests of profit."

I see ulterior motive. People do need to pay attention to what is really going on.

"Overcoming vaccine hesitancy" is self serving, not for the benefit of the person receiving vaccine. These clinics obviously have vested interests and an ulterior agenda. Parents need to be skeptical.

Is it good news or it there an ulterior motive? Are they independent or will they push the agenda and narrative of the loudest voice? Will they seek the best scientific information before making life changing decisions? Are they going to be led by the WHO, WEF, Gates Foundations etc? Will they work with parents to allow them to make informed decisions? There are so many questions and it is open to abuse so what sounds like a good idea could soon become something that it was never intended to be. Lets hope and look on the positive side!!!

Maybe, just maybe America needs to get back to its roots that the Anti American factions infiltrated by mechanizing anti American sloganeering in the 1960's when university Boomers made Marxism popular to hate on and destroy America from the inside. Marching through the institutions (Gramsci), by the 1990's they were junior politicians that hitched the CCP's wagon to America's Van three decades ago. Thank you tongue in cheek well meaning Liberal Democrats. Now we are truly "besties" with the CCP sharing the totalitarian tactics.
Perhaps, rather than listen to the captured administrators of elite academia, and the Oligarchs of Foundations "for the good of all mantra", we should be listening to, I don't know, people who actually sacrificed for America and its people. Actually some less than perfect businessmen, lawyers, soldiers, teachers that are not owned by

If you think the minions in suits, especially "caring" childless corporate women working for the metastasized cancer of American and global big Pharma would not kill your children to make money, deluding themselves of responsibility with their conglomerate collaborators, that have used CCP mentality of totalitarianism for the past three decades when the Democrats made China "besties" to mechanize genocide, you're just voluntary stupid. Or am I just being obtuse and misogynistic?
Funny how everything they intend to use to mechanize future plans, like driving women away from childbirth with demoralization by abortion but maintaining the veneer of being "caring persons" was first grounded years before laying the foundation of misogyny as a negative charge.
I know you want to be good faithful loving people, morally and ethnically beyond reproach, so do it, save your children, stop deluding yourself with your "wants" and think critically about how you were set up to be a serf. You are already being replaced with 12 million illegals that will quickly be 50 million anchor babies with Compulsory Socialized "healthcare". You are nearly useless. Brenda Baletti, Thank you for enunciating these Oligarch health & learning attacks on vulnerable youth, left defenceless by adults who have submitted to false authorities & their falsehoods. School nurses serving many 100s & even 1000s of students do not know the youth as a whole person. Teachers have fallen into the trap of feeding into deficit concepts or learning rather than fostering Strengths, which within one on thirty students is impossible to achieve.
The FALSE FOUNDATIONS of School-Based-Health-Centers SBHC.

Many in our society do not follow school-room-box indoctrination of regurgitated learning, but prefer to contribute with mentors, who are hungry for the brilliance & assistance of youth. Home schooling should be the norm. Some mothers say they need to work, but should find a stay at home mother and barter in exchange for teaching their child(ren). The school system today is an indoctrination center and is not educating them. Children are graduating highchool with the inability to even spell. I thought one of my children was in a top school district... She can't spell...Her math ability got her into the University of California at Berkeley; where she graduated. We did not want her to go there, but my husband gave in. ..

I agree in home schooling today but it has to be planned for. That means living somewhere with low taxes, the land to grow your own food and home economic skills. Those skills, including carpentry, cooking and sewing, haven't been taught in decades. Unfortunately, parents have been thrown into this situation today without those resources.

Agreed with what you have written. Unfortunately, it took awhile for me to awaken, too. My children went to public school, but it was not too bad in the sixties. My older daughter and I left California in 2019, because it was unaffordable to live there. We found an affordable home in another state. My daughter tried her hand at farming, but the only thing she produced were nightshades...which are toxic. Now, she is working on spinach; planting indoors until there is no danger of frost. We also planted 11 fruit trees...and last summer were unprepared for the massive harvest from two peach trees. Two of our four fig trees produced some figs. This year she has canning equipment ready. Last Fall she bought 6 baby chicks...now they are full grown hens. Within a couple more weeks...they will start laying. It is important to think about becoming self-sufficient, because there could be a very bumpy road ahead.

Good for you! Those fruit trees sound like a dream.

Barbara Charis, Yes home schooling as my own 3 children but also every other dimension of the collective domestic economy. There is a loving tendency of women to take more responsibility within the home, but let's support female (& male organization) of the most important collective domestic sector & other female brilliance in every discipline & field. Men should be standing up to support our women (& men) in this most critical of intimate economies. By supporting this strong mostly female tendency to collective domestic organization. 70% of population live in Multihomes (apartment, townhouse & village) & 20% of Multihome-Dwellers are extended families, which are already the largest Service provider at some 2 trillion $$ per year contributing to the North American population. Through accounting recognition & organization in this overlooked essential, each of us can rebuild economy, medicine & education as it should be.
SUPPORTING HOME-SCHOOLING
Why in our Oligarch commanded 'exogenous' (Latin 'other-generated') world is the collective domestic (mostly female) core economy, not recognized. The Domestic including Home-community education should be the first labour & intelligence (capital from Latin 'cap' = 'head' = 'collective-intelligence') which we account for, celebrate & empower in our collective decision-making. Such honouring of the domestic economy as core, was universal in all human 'indigenous' (L. 'self-generating') ancestry & 1st Nations here. Humanity's worldwide time-based equivalency accounting upon the String-shell (eg. Wampum on Turtle-Island, Quipu in S. America & Cowrie in indigenous Celtic-Slavic Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia & all islands) once empowered all people inclusively as true 'money' (Greek 'mnemosis' = 'memory'. Participatory accounting within present day Participatory Corporations is a legacy of our common heritage.
